The VCU School of Pharmacy, Department of Pharmaceutics, has an immediate opening for a full-time faculty member to serve as the Director of the state-of-the-art, newly established, Center for Compounding Practice and Research (CCPR) and to lead teaching, research and scholarly efforts in that field. Applicants must have either a Ph.D., in Pharmaceutical Sciences or a related field, or a Pharm. D., significant experience in extemporaneous compounding and sterile compounding and the regulations affecting the practice, as well as a demonstrated ability to contribute and develop teaching in the School's intramural and extramural programs.

The successful candidate will lead the Center dedicated to advancing the safe and effective use of extemporaneously compounded medications and personalized medicine, through training in the Pharm.D. program, classroom and certificate training, continuing education programs and research. The successful candidate should have demonstrated experience working in and fostering a diverse faculty, staff and student environment or a commitment to do so as a faculty member, contribute to high-impact teaching and scholarship in the School’s graduate and professional degree programs and provide service to the School and the University.

Located in historic Richmond, VCU is one of the nation's top research universities, enrolling more than 31,000 students on two campuses. The School of Pharmacy is part of the VCU Medical Center which offers state-of-the-art care in more than 200 specialty areas and educates physicians, nurses, pharmacists, dentists, and other health professionals.

The search committee will review applications until the position is filled, but priority will be given to complete applications received by August 31, 2014. 12-month salary and academic rank (non tenure-track) are commensurate with experience and qualifications. Applicants should send a letter of interest, curriculum vitae, and three letters of reference to:
